VAIDER

TACTILE LUXURY meets MODERN MINIMALISM

In today’s competitive drinks market, design innovation is key. Trends for 2025 highlight a shift toward structured and tactile surfaces—where aesthetics meet functionality. Embossed textures, geometric patterns, and a play between smooth and rough finishes create bottles that are visually striking and sensorially engaging.

DESIGN AS IDENTITY

Where Texture Tells a Story

Exploring shapes and styles is redefining glass packaging. Classic forms are gaining modern twists, and textures are making a bold comeback, evoking the origin of ingredients and reconnecting us with nature. In this return to timeless elegance, glass becomes a storytelling medium through realistic textures, ornate motifs, and refined surfaces.

JUPITER POLARIS

A Celestial Experience

Jupiter Polaris captures attention with clean lines, geometric structure, and luxurious detail. The contrast between the sleek top and textured bottom — reminiscent of cracked ice — offers not only visual sophistication but also improved grip and user experience.

Made with extra white flint glass for crystal clarity, the Polaris bottle delivers an extraordinary optical effect, like the northern sky on a frozen night. Its versatile elegance suits whisky, gin, vodka, cognac, and more.
